Last week I reviewed Bill Farley's new book Gospel-Powered Parenting. I recommended it highly, saying it had "just the right combination of affirmation (your struggles are universal struggles, your joys are universal joys) and exhortation to both encourage and challenge me in all the right ways." After I reviewed it, I found there were a few things I wanted to ask the author.

The Gospel: The Key to Parenting - Tim Challies

Gospel-Powered Parenting The gospel is the most important tool for Christian parenting. For many parents this statement is surprising. When most Christians hear the word "gospel" they think of soul-winning. The gospel saves unbelievers. While this is true, the gospel is much more than a message for the lost.
