Community Reviews. 'He Died With A Felafel In His Hand' was a fun, light read that took me back to the not so fun, light days of brown couches (yes, I owned one), milk crates (I had several) and bucket bongos. Bucket bongos were a thing in Queensland, Birmingham writes. They were also a thing in the Blue Mountains, west of Sydney,...

He Died With A Felafel In His Hand by John Birmingham

He Died with a Felafel in His Hand (Richard Lowenstein, 2001) The movie's opening scene is a close-up of an Australian cane toad. We sit and stare at it for a bit, then a three wood lines up alongside it. It disappears, then you hear a cry of "Fore!" cut to main title, and there's a wet thwack.
