If you happen to show up, disregard my email. Here's the final version we went with, completely unrelated to the original. There's someone for everyone. Even Steve. On a day when things can't possibly go worse for used-car salesman Steve Pendragon, somebody murders Kerry Parker, the guarded, secretive girl next door with something to hide.

Harmless | Ernie Lindsey

Every Thursday evening, about an hour after I got home from work, Clarence would drive up in his litter pan, and he'd climb out with his stupid receding hairline—seriously, it's like a peninsula of baldness—his stupid, milky, pasty white skin, his stupid, punch-me-in-the-face glasses, and his stupid trench coat worn over a dime-store suit, even in the middle of July, and she'd greet ...

Ernie Lindsey does a great job of getting inside his protagonist's head and showing us just what might motivate someone like this. Of course, a first-person story written from the standpoint of someone who's not really all there is not really all that interesting. Just when you are wondering what the heck is really going on, a brief chapter ...
